As inner development, its contribution to sustainable development and how to support it likely vary extensively depending on the cultural and regional context, there is a need to ask for perspectives from other countries and contexts to complement the existing IDG framework and library of research, stories and methods.

Phase 3: Global Study for Adjusting the IDG Framework

- We aim to globally validate and adjust the IDG framework and toolkit, with input from 100,000+ people in 100+ countries.
- Examining how the IDGs can help accelerate the work towards the SDGs.
- How to use and integrate IDGs in the most useful ways in organizations and in a few pilot countries.

This is a call for researchers focusing on inner development, capacity building and sustainability, to contribute to the Inner Development Goals (IDG) initiative.

Background

The IDG initiative aims to promote inner development and human capacities necessary for achieving the Global Sustainable Development Goals. The first phase of the initiative consisted of an open survey on which inner skills and qualities we need to develop to better address the SDGs. This resulted in the IDG framework of 23 skills organised into five dimensions: www.innerdevelopmentgoals.org/framework.

The second phase collected methods, interventions and practices for developing the skills, resulting in a field-kit with examples of how to promote inner development.

Phase three of the initiative will consist of global prototyping, input and adjustment of Going global - We want your help to reach:
